Burning questions about Academic Integrity

Go to www.menti.com on your computer or mobile device
What confuses you most about Academic Integrity?

- How to have original thoughts/ideas when it feels like EVERYTHING has been done already
- Getting help for writing
- When two authors have similar ideas
- Do I need to quote general knowledge?
- Do different courses have different rules?
- When I have an identical idea to an author
- My parents edit my assignments/ is this ok!?!
- What happens if I read something, and then think it is my own idea later on, forgetting what I've read.
- When is collaborating with others considered 'cheating' or collusion (learnt that new word yesterday at the launch!)
What confuses you most about Academic Integrity?

- When to reference and when not to reference words and ideas
- Common knowledge?
- Accidental plagiarism - impossible to cite everything!

Common knowledge?
What do you hope to get out of this session?

- Where to get help?
- Better understanding of rules
- Bad habits to avoid
- How to reference better
- Clarity on what rules apply to my discipline
- Answers to those great questions. How can I check my writing
- How not write with integrity and avoid misconduct
- How to do group work without committing misconduct
- Can someone in this session tell me how to positively encourage showing integrity? All the ways to encourage people are usually negative (bad grades, expulsion, etc)
- What help am I allowed to get with my assignments?

ACADEMIC INTEGRITY
MYTH BUSTING
If I copy text from a source but reference it, this is not plagiarism.
It is fine to add the references after I’ve written the assignment.
If I already know a fact, I do not need to provide a reference for it.
I can help a friend to draft their essay if they are having trouble.
It is okay to use a commercial editing service for my paper if I wrote the draft myself.
Expressing others’ words in your own words is less elegant, so direct quoting is better than paraphrasing.
If Turnitin says my essay is not breaching copyright, I am not in breach of rules.
It is okay to share previous assignments with others doing the same course.
An academic misconduct outcome will appear on my academic transcript when I graduate.
It is okay to use my previous work in a new assignment.
I will be expelled from university if I commit academic misconduct.
If I am accused of academic misconduct, there is nothing I can do.
Ask our panellists anything

Go to www.menti.com

on your computer or mobile device
Ask our panellists anything about Academic Integrity:

- What if I find out classmates are cheating?
- What are the best texts to use for an assignment?
- Do I need to ‘dub in’ other students if I know they are behaving unethically? Am I responsible if I don’t?
- At what point is it okay not to cite any sources in order to build an argument academically that is my own?
- When the new guidelines come out in December, where can I find them?
- Two related postgrad questions from Eventbrite: how do I write for journal publication with integrity? Where do I stand with control over publications featuring my own samples and data?
- How would I reference in an oral presentation?
- Are there assignment where I don’t need to reference?
